1958 PACKARD HAWK

Base Price: $2,511 Engine: 283 c.i.d. V-8 Horsepower: 220 Wheelbase: 115" Weight: 3,409 lb. Owner: Bob & Polly Zetterman

Chevy's from 1955-57 were collectively known as, "The Hot Ones". The 1957 edition marked the final year of that styling trilogy with a fine design. A split, mesh cut grille was book-ended between rubber bumper bullets up front. Alongside, a full-length spear spread into a broad, ribbed wedge on the back fenders. Capping off the look was a set of elegant, tall tailfins, deftly demoted with lights and bumper. In all, it was the sort of facelift that would have you asking for the name of the plastic surgeon. Mechanically, the '57 Chevy showed the benefits of three years of sorting and refining. Engineers had stiffened up the chassis and revamped the front and rear suspension. Cars equipped with the optional V-8 and overdrive automatic transmission received a slightly larger motor than before. While the base engine in manual transmission cars remained the 285 c.i.d. V-8, automatics were matched with a new, 283 c.i.d. version of Chevy's famous, small block eight.

1952 C.C.I.L. MODEL F4L514

Tractor Owner: Bryan Eleveld - Photo By: Gary Alan Nelson
The Massey-Harris Pacemaker was introduced in 1936, replacing the Watts 1220. The U-frame Pacemaker was powered by the Massey-Harris four-cylinder gasoline engine with transmission. The Pacemaker was a standard (wide) front tractor, with approximately 3,000 units built in 1936 and 1937. A styled version was manufactured in 1938.
